

Abstract

A method for increasing the boundary layer strength of a workpiece made of brittle, hard material by applying a plastic deformation to a narrowly limited surface area, in order to generate internal compressive strain within a workpiece where the temperature of the workpiece is not elevated prior to the application of mechanical force.